AILING PROBLEMS

Recently, it has come to my attention that there have been numerous delays, particularly on the East Coast, in receiving the Observer. The Observer is mailed on Wednesday afternoons, thus should arrive on a regular basis anywhere within the continental United States by Saturday. That doesn't seem to be the case, but certainly it should reach most everyone on a regular basis by Monday. I've already talked with local post office officials about these delays and suggest if they continue that you contact officials at your end. It's pretty disheartening when readers in Japan get the Observer days before readers in the United States.

If there is any problem with the Observer you receive, such as not all the pages arriving or a printing problem with one of the pages, please contact us immediately at the Observer address, fax number or call 408-379-8067 and a replacement issue will be sent. If you don't receive the Observer by the following Thursday (or eight days after mailing), please either write, fax or call the above number and a replacement issue will be sent out. Our policy on issues that haven't arrived is to wait until Thursday because the vast majority of times, if an issue is a few days late, it usually does arrive a day or two after we receive the complaints if done earlier in the week simply because the post office was slow in delivering them.

If you are changing addresses, please list both your old and new address when informing us.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

In an effort to get readers' feelings on controversial issues regarding pro wrestling, we are going to attempt to do a "Question of the Week?" (not on a weekly basis but maybe every second or third week dependent upon reader interest) segment. The first question is, "If you were in charge of WCW, what wrestler would you pick to build the promotion around as the lead babyface?" This person doesn't necessarily have to be someone within the organization, but limit it to a viable candidate who the organization could reasonably get if needed.
